Next Generation Professional Algae Masks

Alginates are anionic polysaccharides widely distributed in the cell walls of brown marine algae. Alginates correspond to organic polymers derived from alginic acid, such as D-Manuric and L-guluronic, two monomeric units joined by 1,4 links.

The alginate present in brown algae is located in the intercellular matrix in gel form and its main function is to act as support, supplying strength and flexibility to the fine tissue of algae.

From the combination of alginates, kaolin and rice starch is born ALGINASINE, a plastic film able to establish a vehicle, through the skin, for the properties of the active ingredients found on its composition, obtaining fast and efficient results favouring the elimination of toxins of the body.

HOW DO ALGINASINE MASKS WORK?

Their main function is to introduce actives on the skin through saturation or occlusion. Masks have great level of applications, that vary depending on the actives combined; nutrient supply (balancing moisture or natural ph of the skin), lipid normalization, collagen and elastin regeneration or cell renewal regeneration.
